Can You Learn to Be Optimistic?

Tampa, Fla. (August, 2013). Have you ever felt as if pretty much everything in your life wasn't going very good? Have you experienced getting up in the morning with a groan and going to bed at night with a sigh thinking that life that day was just plain difficult? Do you believe that there are really two ways of looking at life? We call these "ways" optimism and pessimism. Believe it or not, but we are not born to follow one or the other path. We actually learn to view the world from a certain perspective and that perspective is often reinforced by others and by our own self talk. Sometimes we learn to be "helpless." Sometimes we learn to "give up." At the same time, others facing the same situation develop a "can do" attitude and use the same event that for us is painful as a tool for growth. It all comes down to paying attention to what we tell ourselves. Am I saying that we can "learn" to be optimistic?

According to what I have learned from Martin E. P. Seligman, Ph.D. in his book Learned Optimism: How to Change Your Mind and Your Life - that is exactly what I am saying! We can start with some simple steps like beginning to recognize our own "explanatory style" or what it is that we say to ourselves when we experience any type of set back or stressful event in our lives. We can begin to catch ourselves using negative phrases (both when said out loud and thought quietly within ourselves), use a thought-stopping technique to stop the automatic self talk, and then challenge and rephrase what we are telling ourselves.

Another helpful book that addresses how our self talk and expectations lead to negative emotions is A Guide to Rational Living by Albert Ellis and Robert Harper. Here the authors address how, by holding on to a specific set of beliefs and/or expectations, we can "set ourselves up" for either a positive or negative outcome.

If you have found yourself or a loved one caught up in having more negative rather than positive views of life and are not sure where to turn or what you should do, help is just a phone call away. Call your EAP. You can explore in a confidential setting the concerns that you have and receive assistance to determine how to remain safe. Remember that when you need to sort out your feelings about what is happening in your life help is a phone call away. The EAP can help you find a new path so that the changes you need to make can be managed. Remember that the Employee Assistance Program (EAP) is a benefit available to you and your dependents. Help is available 24-hours a day, 7 days a week. EAP is a tool for personal and professional growth. Above all, keep in mind that concerns develop over time but the way you address them can be changed.
